

Contents

---

Foreword	7
1 Introduction	9
2 Kaupang	12
2.1 The Viking-period town of Kaupang	12
2.2 Kaupang in Skiringssal	17
3 The background: Viking-period metalworking	21
3.1 Viking-period smiths	21
3.1.1 Day-to-day smiths	21
3.1.2 The master of the fire	25
3.1.3 The ideal smith and the real smith	25
3.2 Metallurgy	28
3.3 The workshop and its organization	31
4 Non-ferrous metalworking finds from the settlement area at Kaupang	37
4.1 Lead models	38
4.1.1 Models for making equal-armed brooches	40
4.1.1.1 Models for making equal-armed brooches of the Ljønnes group	40
4.1.1.2 Models for making other equal-armed brooches	43
4.1.1.3 Unclassified fragments which may be models for making equal-armed brooches	45
4.1.1.4 Discussion — Lead models for making equal-armed brooches	46
4.1.2 Possible models for making penannular brooches	49
4.1.3 Model for making lozenge brooches	52
4.1.4 Models for making dies for cruciform pendants	52
4.1.5 Models for making mounts	55
4.1.6 Models for making armrings	58
4.1.7 Model for making key-handles	60
4.1.8 Possible model for making miniature axes	60
4.1.9 Other models	61
4.1.10 Lead models — summary and context	64
4.1.11 The function of the lead models	69
4.2 A lead mould for producing wax models	74
4.3 Matrix dies	78
4.4 Moulds	81
4.4.1 Mould of volcanic tuff(?) for making pendants	82
4.4.2 Moulds of soapstone and similar material	84
4.4.2.1 Types, range, and distribution	84
4.4.2.2 Archaeometallurgical analyses of soapstone moulds	90
4.4.3 Moulds of other kinds of stone	94
4.4.4 Fired clay moulds	95

4.4.4.1	Types, range, and distribution	95
4.4.4.2	Archaeometallurgical analyses of fired clay moulds	108
4.4.4.3	Petrological analyses of fired-clay moulds	109
4.5	Crucibles	111
4.5.1	Types, range, and distribution	111
4.5.2	Archaeometallurgical analyses for identifying traces of metal	121
4.5.2.1	The first round of analyses	121
4.5.2.2	The second round of analysis	123
4.5.2.3	Thin-sectioning	124
4.5.2.4	The metal analyses summarized	125
4.5.3	Chemical analyses of the clay in the melting crucibles	125
4.5.4	Archaeometallurgical analyses of visually identified copper alloys	126
4.5.5	Petrological analyses of the clay in the melting crucibles	127
4.6	Other forms of metallurgical ceramics	128
4.6.1	Cupellation crucibles	129
4.6.2	Ceramic 'packaging' material	135
4.6.3	Unidentified fragments of metallurgical ceramics	140
4.7	Tuyères	141
4.7.1	Soapstone tuyères	141
4.7.2	Fired clay tuyères	146
4.8	Raw material, semi-manufactures, and metal production waste	146
4.8.1	A lead punch pad	146
4.8.2	Ingots and other raw material	146
4.8.2.1	Types, extent and distribution	146
4.8.2.2	Archaeometallurgical analyses of silver ingots	153
4.8.2.3	Archaeometallurgical analyses of copper-alloy ingots	154
4.8.3	Fragments	159
4.8.3.1	Types and range	159
4.8.3.2	Archaeometallurgical analyses of silver fragments and hacksilver	160
4.8.4	Casting waste	161
4.8.4.1	Melted drops	161
4.8.4.2	Casting sprues	165
4.8.4.3	The silver content of a melting crucible and a summary of the archaeometallurgical analyses of the silver	167
4.8.4.4	Archaeometallurgical analyses of copper-alloy casting waste	169
4.9	The identified products of the non-ferrous metalworking	172
4.9.1	Circular pendants with a St. Andrew's cross	172
4.9.2	Other lead pendants	177
4.9.3	Other dress-accessories	177
4.9.4	Miscellaneous	178
4.9.5	Items of equipment in lead	179
4.10	Workshops and waste management	180
4.10.1	Summary of the distribution of the finds	180
4.10.2	The workshop on plot 1B	181
4.10.3	Casting in building A302	184
4.10.4	Dumping zones, boundary ditches, and pits	185

5	Non-ferrous metalworking in the Viking-period town	189
5.1	The practical processes	189
	5.1.1 Metalcasting	189
	5.1.2 The making of pressed foil	192
	5.1.3 Other smithing and working of metals	193
	5.1.4 The refining of metals	193
	5.1.5 Soldering	194
5.2	Raw material available	194
5.3	Volumes of production	195
5.4	The characteristics of the production	197
5.5	The non-ferrous metalworkers and the Viking-period town	198
	5.5.1 The non-ferrous metalworkers and the others	198
	5.5.2 The non-ferrous metalworkers, trade, and exchange	200
	5.5.3 The skills of the non-ferrous metalworkers	201
	5.5.4 The non-ferrous metalworkers of Kaupang?	203
	Abbreviations	206
	References	207
	Author	222